There is a flood float in the bottom so if any water gets into the base, it will shut off the water and run the drain pump as long as the power button is on. So shut off the breaker, remove the toe kick, and remove any water that is down there. Now start the machine and see if water is leaking into the base. If there isnt any water, an the dw is still running the drain pump, then with a wooden spoon raise the red plastice stick on the left side of the dishwasher up and down. It is possible that the overfil float is stuck. If this makes the dw start filling, then run cooking oil thru the dishwasher on the scrub cycle to remove excessive detergent. If you are in hard water, then the water deposits have caused this. Run citric acid Tang orange drink, Dishwasher Magic, or such thru the dishwasher to remove this. Look under the top and you will find screws that you can take out and pull cage out. Then look at all of the drains, filters and see if anything is clogged. How can I adjust that. The salt is used by the water softener to prevent hard water deposits which result in white stains on crockery and glasses. There are several things which can cause this 1. There is no salt in the salt container. 2. The lid on the salt container isn't screwed on properly. Don't overtighten though! 3. Water softener is set too low. If you've checked and topped up the salt level and the lid is screwed on fully, then your water softener may be set too low. The white deposits can also be caused by the rinse agent being set too low. On your washer, the adjustment will be on a dial under the flap where you refill the rinse agent. I think it's numbered 15, so if it's set on 1, try number 3, if it's on 3, try 4 or 5. You may have to adjust a couple of times until you get it right. If this doesn't solve the problem, try changing your detergent. Check the packaging and if you're using phosphate-free detergent, try one containing phosphates. Phosphate-free is more eco-friendly though! Same solenoid opens soap drawer as injects rinse aid. Any blockages in dispenser unit itself. There is a flood float in the bottom so if any water gets into the base, it will shut off the water and run the drain pump as long as the power button is on. Run citric acid Tang orange drink, Dishwasher Magic, or such thru the dishwasher to remove this. We checked the fuse and it is fine. I'd rather not pay for a repairman as it is quite expensive.
